

So Far From My Home

Lyrics and Music by Dick Levon, Levon©2003

How did I ever drift so far?
Far from the beauty of her shores.
A little town on the Eastern lake side
Holds my sorrow and my many joys.
How did I ever drift so far, far away from my home?

Thought I was headed down the right side of the road.
You know the one heading West along the Blue Star.
Past the fields and the hills where we lay,
Tasting Sweet Strawberries setting young hearts ablaze.
How did I ever drift so far, far away from my home?

Lured by the song of Sirens
From islands of steel and stone.
Shining city promises
Turned empty, mean, and so cold.
Thought my heart was leading,
Was my vain of fools gold.
Found my soul was bleeding
On the block being sold.

How did I ever get this way?
Never ever thought a man could sink so ga'damn low.
Hearing endless friendless testimony faceless in a crowd.
But I rise up to the morning star, to sing my song out loud.
How did I ever drift so far, far away from my home?

When I lose my way again.
I'll see the light from you old friend.
My heart is healing,
I'm not so alone.
My soul is singing.
"I'm home I'm home."

How could I ever drift so far, far away...?
So far from my home
